- ASEAS 3(1) -

National and local threats, crises and conflicts in South-East Asia

- Deadline January 15, 2010 -

Topic Details

Since their independence South-East Asian nations have grappled with numerous internal problems which have threatened both socio-economic development and nation-building. Social inequalities, urbanisation, rural exodus, political marginalization or ethnic conflicts are only some of these issues. ASEAS 3(1) will concentrate on the national and local effects of these challenges and how the national societies and local communities have responded to these threats.

In addition, we invite submissions for the sections "Forum South-East Asia", "Research Workshop", "In Dialogue" or "Review" that deal with South-East Asia on a more general level.

Journal Details

The Austrian Journal of South-East Asian Studies / Österreichische Zeitschrift für Südostasienwissenschaften (ASEAS) is a core project of the Society for South-East Asian Studies (SEAS) in Vienna. The journal's editors invite both established as well as young scholars to present research results and theoretical papers (scientific and journalistic texts are welcome), to report about ongoing research projects or field studies, to introduce academic as well as non-academic institutions, to publish conference reports and other short essays, to conduct interviews with experts on South-East Asia, or to review literature.

As an interdisciplinary journal, ASEAS intends to cover a variety of aspects of South-East Asia (archaeology, culture, economics, geography, linguistics, politics, society, etc.) from both historical as well as contemporary perspectives. Topics should be related to South-East Asia, but they do not need to be restricted to the geographical region, as in the case of - for example - linguistics, diaspora groups, forms of socio-cultural transfers, and so forth, where spatial and political borders of South-East Asia are crossed.

ASEAS is published biannually both in print and as an online Open Access-Journal. ISSN 1999-2521 (Print) and ISSN 1999-253X (Online).
